

Parents are very much concerned for (write: about) their children's future and try their best to provide every possible opportunity to them. Some people believe that educational institutions must make their wards skilled, while others say that teaching students different subjects will be advantageous (write: advantageous to them) in their future. Although having various skills can put a learner one step ahead in every field, I believe that getting knowledge of different subjects will be beneficial for students.

On the one hand, teaching skills to students at school can make them confident and will help them to become successful because they participate (write: can participate) in various competitions at national and international levels which boost their confidence.

Remarks

Skills can be vocational skills, artistic skills or communication skills. How many students can win national and international level competitions in these skills? The main advantage of acquiring skills is that it improves your chances of finding employment. For example, there are schools that teach carpentry or farming. These lessons help students find employment in those areas. That is the main advantage.

Also, they meet (write: can meet) various competitors and explore different places which improves their interaction skills.

Remarks

Write about what the majority of students are capable of doing. Maybe one or two can travel abroad but that is insignificant.

For example, it has become common to see youngsters doing jobs at various places and the reason behind this trend is that they have enough skills to fit into any job of their interests. As a result, it is essential to teach skills to students in schools.

Remarks

Your arguments lacked depth. You didn't mention exactly what kind of skills you are talking about.

On the other hand, knowing (write: learning) different subjects is important as children will have vast areas (write: opportunities) to choose the subject they want to master. This can only be possible if learners know the fundamentals of every subject, and school is the place where children have options to choose subjects. It is commonly seen that learners make up their minds at school about what subjects they will have at the university level, which means that they have clarity on what to do next. Hence, it is beneficial to learn various subjects at school

In conclusion, although the advantages of learning skills at school can not (write: cannot) be denied, I believe that the provision of a range of subjects for students is compulsory for them.
